The Coroner's Office.

From the Volksfreund.] Coroner Dr. Stich has, during the short time of his official career, already shown that he is the right man in the right place. The Germans of Cincinnati may congratulate themselves that they have found such an able representative. Such has gloriously worked his way up to his office, and we are convinced that when he has arrived at the end of his Coronership the public will say that he has never made a "alse "Stich." It will be by him "Finis coronat opus."

[We may also add toat Dr. Stich has made a good selection in the appointment of his clerk, Mr. G. H. Menke, who has already surmounted the difficulties of his position, which are very arduous and bear heavily on a new beginner. Mr. Menke, by his kind and affable mar-ners, has won lor himself a large num-ber of friends. Under the regime of Dr. Stich and Mr. Menke, affairs at the Coroner's office promise to be better managed than under any Coroner heretofore.]

Martin Bare against Jas. L. Wise, County Treasurer, and Jos. B. Hamphries, County Auditor. This was a proceeding in the nature of an injunction to enjoin the collection of a tax alleged by the plaintiff to be unlawful upon his property on Walnut street, near Commerce. A preliminary injunction was obtained some months since to prevent the collection of taxes.

It was claimed that the Treasurer had disregarded the temporary order issued in the case, and that he had sought to enforce indirectly the collection of this llegal tax. The Court found that the citation issued in the case ought not to have been issued, and that the plaintiff had not placed himself in contempt, and the rule against him was discharged at the plaintiff's cost.

This morning in the Police Court an that a young man named Goo. Seegers entered his shop one day recently and attempted to sell him some candy. Seegers' price did not suit Bunting and no sale was effected.

A few minutes later Seegers again entered the place, and importuned him to buy a small bill of goods, and again departed without doing any business. An hour later he came the third time, and appeared to be very angry. The cause of the anger Busting did not know. tacked Bunting. The youth was ejected, and then he mashed in the window of the little shop.

A while after, while Bunting was on his way up Eim street to procure a war-rant for the arrest of his assailant, See-gers overtook him, abused him feartully, and finally knocked him down with a well-aimed blow on his left ear with a brick. That ended the affair until today, when Judge Lindemann heard the above facts, and the statement of de-fendant, which in substance is, that he (Seegers) went into the shop at the time mentioned and caught Bunting in a quesmentioned and caught Bruting in a questionable predicament with a little girl not more than eight years old, whom, as was alleged, had been enticed into the place by the promise of a stick of candy. That Seegers' indignation at such brutal proceedings so incensed him that he could not restrain himself, and that he did assault Bunting. Officer Kelly was called to the stand and asked if he knew anything in regard to this state.

Noted American Women.

Mary Abigali Fillmore was the rarest Mary Abigail Fillmore was the rarest and most exquisite President's daughter that ever shed sunshine in the "White House." Although she died at 22, yet her memory is a benison to all young American women, especially to those surrounded by the influences incident to high station and brilliant social life. to high station and britiant social life. Not content with mere accomplishments, she secured a thoroughly practical education. She was a French, German, and Spanish scholar, a skillful musician, and an amateur sculptor. She combined intellectual force, genuine sensibility, and deep tender ness of heart with brilliant wit and sparkling humor. She used her opportunities, as the President's daughter, to minister to others. "Blessing she was, God made her so," and her memory is a benediction to American maidens.

and her memory is a benediction to American maidens.

Not many years since, had you chanced to see a plainly dressed girl of eleven summers trundling through the streets of Lancaster a wheelbarrow load of wood, careless of her own appearance, but deeply interested in the comfort of a poor colored woman, you would searcely have chosen her as the girl soarcely have chosen her as the girl who was to become the social queen of the White House, or who, by nersurpassing brightness, was to make such an impression upon the Queen Victoria,

American girl one of the leading ladies at the Court of St. James. On the continent and in Paris she was everywhere greeted as a "girl-queen." And when Harriet Lane was called to preside at the White House, honors of every kind, such as probably were never before bestowed upon an American girl, were heaped upon her.

We read that she was declared the most popular person in the United States, and wonder what was the secret States, and wonder what was the secret of her power. Soon the answer is given. "She loved human beligs and delighted in their friendship. She never forgot an oid friend, and never neglected the opportunity of making a new one." She filled every hour of prosperity with the rare sunshine of her nature, in the nour of trial was not found wanting, and in the lace of danger rose to the dignity of heroism. Her gallant stay in the White neroism. Her gallant stay in the White House while her husband had gone to mold a council of war; her cool com-mands relative to the protection of the picture of Washington, while in sound of the enemy's cannon and messengers begging her to flee, are proud facts in our nistory. No eminent man retired from service of the State ever had more public recognition and more honor be stowed upon him by the government than did this ever-beloved woman. Until ner deats, on New Year's day, after paying their respects to the President, all the high officers of the government always adjourned to the home of Mrs. Madison, to pay their respects to her. Congress conferred upon her the franking privilege, and unanimously voted her a seat in the Senate chamber—two privileges never before conferred upon any other American woman.—["M. C.
